Crude oil prices are today accelerating their losses after a torrid last week, with Brent and WTI opening more than 2% lower on Monday morning after losing 0.5% and 1.1% to close at USD 37.46/barrel and USD 35.79/barrel, respectively, in Friday's session. England will this week join Germany, France and other European neighbours in a four-week lockdown starting on Thursday that will prohibit overseas holiday flights, prime minister Boris Johnson announced on Saturday. France entered its second national lockdown on Friday, while Italy, Spain and Germany are all tightening travel restrictions – which are weighing on transport fuel demand, particularly for jet fuel.

Natural gas prices are still holding up, with US gas benchmark Henry Hub's front month gaining 1.6% on Friday and UK NBP rising 1.4% to hit the equivalent of USD 5.37/MMBtu. Dutch TTF saw 1.1% to USD 4.80/MMBtu, but CME's December-dated JKM futures contract rose 1.4% to USD 7.02/MMBtu, erasing the prior three session's losses.

The European carbon price also stood firm, as month-ahead ETS allowance (EUA) futures gained 0.2% to close at EUR 23.70/tonne.
