Risky Business, part 3 – The major risks facing LNG players in the next few years

The LNG business is undergoing an unprecedented expansion, with FID taken on nearly 140 mtpa of new capacity, visual_editor4.5 mtpa of which is due to come on stream this year. And the supply of new projects is not drying up: the capacity of projects intending to take FID this year adds up to close to 100 mtpa. Gas Strategies considers some of the major risks facing LNG players in the next few years, how these risks might play out, and how the different players might respond to those risks.
