On the campaign trail: Gas policy and the US presidential race

Politics aside? Not a chance this year. Airwaves and print media, post boxes and inboxes, phone lines and Twitter – people in the US have been inundated by presidential campaigns at every level. But they haven't heard too much about energy, let alone natural gas. Still, the candidates have dropped some hints that suggest a fairly high degree of convergence over gas, but some sharp differences too. Gas Matters examines the fine detail in the first of a two-part series.
